“AlgaeEurope 2021 will be organized in digital format from 7-9 December”

The forthcoming edition of the AlgaeEurope conference will once again be held in a digital format. Initially the conference was scheduled to take place in Rome, Italy, but since there are still many uncertainties with regards to the Covid-19 situation and international traveling the organizers have decided in an early stage to host the conference online.

The decision to host the conference in an online format enables the organisers to put together a dedicated program that addresses current issues within the Algae Biomass sector and offer clarity to all delegates and participating companies.

Since years AlgaeEurope is one of the most global compressive conferences about science, technology and business in the Algae Biomass sector, one of the key success factors AlgaeEurope is the close cooperation between EABA - European Algae Biomass Association and DLG Benelux.

The last edition of AlgaeEurope, which took place online from 1-4 December 2020 welcomed 265 delegates and 188 organisations from 41 countries, in addition some 200 abstracts were submitted. The organisers are committed to attract even more delegates and organisations to the coming edition in December.

In order to do so the organisers have already started to draft a program on relevant topics within the Algae Biomass sector that will provide in-depth understanding of the sector and contribute to knowledge transfer amongst industry professionals and to those who simply want to start learning about the world of Algae.

In order to encourage even more industry professionals to submit their abstracts for AlgaeEurope 2021 the organisers have already opened the call for abstracts.

The planning is that AlgaeEurope 2022 will be held in a live and online format in Rome!

More details on the program will be released shortly, more information about the AlgaeEurope conference can be found on www.algaeurope.org
